Programme Report

Date:- 24/02/2023

Time:-02:00PM to 3:30 PM

Topic:-How to Publish Research Papers

Speaker:-

Dr.S.Pol

Dr.D.D.Balsaraf

Dr.C.D.Sonawane

Organized by:- ASM College of Commerce ,Science & Information Technology

Venue: College Auditorium

ASM-CSIT College organized a program to Facilitate, consolidate and coordinate " How to Publish Research Papers" at ASM-CSIT college auditorium on 17 Feb 2023.

The event started with Saraswati Puja it was followed by felicitation form,

It was followed by felicitation of all dignitaries on the dias.

Welcome address was given by Asst.Prof Rushi Durge.

Dr.S.Pol sir guided regarding the summary of research paper and explain the research paper and its uses,he explained the tools of the research .

As Dr.D.D.Balsarf explained about the quantitative approaches & qualitative approaches he explained the flow charts steps used in the qualitative research process.

1.Acknowledge Social self

2.Adopt Perspective

3.Design study

4.Collect data

5.Analyze data

6.Interpret Data

7.Result findings

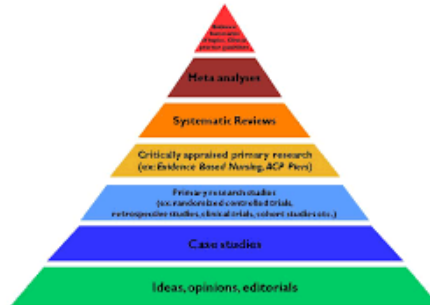

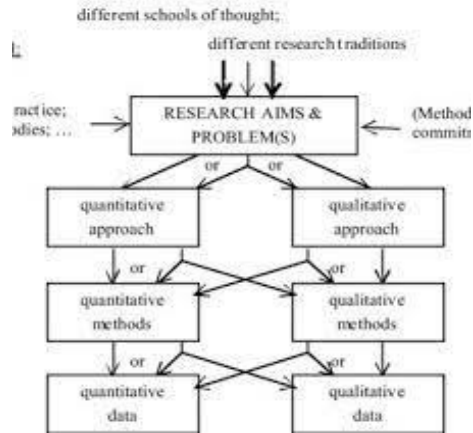

Quantitative Approaches	Qualitative Approaches
Independent of context	Construct social reality & Cultural Meaning
Measure objective facts	Focus on interactive processes & events
Focus on variables	Authenticity is key
Reliability is key	Values are present and explicit
Value free	Theory and data are fused
Theory and data are separate	Situationally constrained
Many cases, subjects	Few cases, subjects
Statistical analysis	Thematic analysis
Researcher is detached	Researcher is involved

It should be written clearly and succinctly. It should just have one paragraph.

It shouldn't present any fresh evidence or arguments.

The summary should include a succinct explanation of the paper's main ideas.

Dr.C.D Sonawane sir explained regarding The Combined Use of Qualitative and Quantitative Methods in Educational Research Abstract in this he explained the diagram of different quantitative level or qualitative levels according to niglas(1999a)

1. Read The Entire Research Paper
2. Take Notes As You Read
3. Organize Your Thoughts
4. Write The Summary
5. Write The Introduction
6. Introduce The Report's Purpose
7. Use Keywords To Introduce The Report
8. State The Author's Conclusions
9. Keep It Concise
10. Edit And Proofread

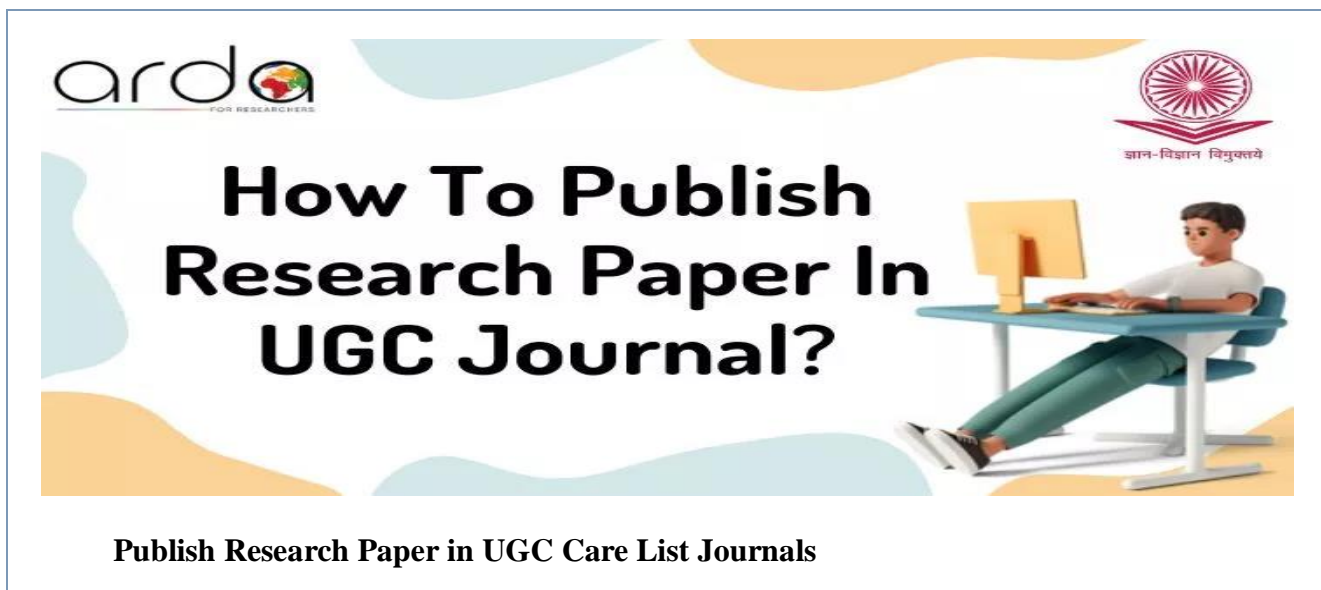

Tools To Write An Effective Summary For A Research Paper

2. Summarizer
3. Grammar Check

What Are The Main Elements Of An Effective Summary For Research Papers?

There are several elements that should be included in an effective summary for a research paper. These elements include:

- A brief statement of the paper's thesis statement.
- A description of each of the paper's main points.
- A final thought or impression that leaves the reader with a sense of closure.
- Edit and proofread the summary to ensure accuracy and clarity.

How To Publish Research Paper In UGC Journal?

Publish Research Paper in UGC Care List Journals

Publish Research Paper in UGC Care List Journals

The process of publishing a manuscript in a UGC Care List journal begins with –

1. Choosing an important question
2. Designing a sound study with statistical power, carrying out the work with integrity and care, and impeccable detail
3. Writing an excellent manuscript
4. Submitting it to the most appropriate UGC Care List Journal

Make sure the quality of your research is exemplary

Coming up with a research question of substantial significance to the discipline and society at large

Your research study design should be foolproof

Make sure to get your scientific writing on point

Having a solid cover letter to back up your manuscript

Picking the right UGC CARE List Journal for your research

1. Make sure the quality of your research is exemplary

What are the prerequisites for sound research?

Choosing a reputable unit with a suitable mentor is crucial for aspiring young scientists. We need mentors to help us through the maze of scientific idiocy, traps, and dead ends. They motivate us to develop our best qualities, maintain our focus, and achieve success. There is no reward for inventing the wheel, therefore before beginning research on a topic, it is crucial to examine the literature and understand what has already been done.

2. Coming up with a research question of substantial significance to the discipline and society at large

What qualifies such a query?

In general, and for researchers, the research question should come from a significant issue in the field that has a major impact on society as a whole.

Therefore, it is recommended to steer clear of rare phenomena since they are better studied in larger, more established units with substantial research funding that can be devoted to them.

Choose a vibrant field of study where you may employ fresh approaches and ideas, and most crucially, obtain lots of funds.

Instead of settling for conducting confirmatory descriptive study, try to define the mechanisms.

Choose a subject that others in your vicinity are informed about and can assist you with if necessary.

3. Your research study should have an impenetrable design.

The design of any research project is its most important component.

From the beginning, it should be as perfect as possible.

No matter how good a writer you are, if the design is poor, it won't be possible to fix it while writing the manuscript.

The majority of editors and reviewers use the research study's design quality as their primary criterion for evaluation. The manuscript doesn't go any further if it is flawed.

Due to the use of unsuitable controls, many research endeavors end up being wasted opportunities.

Never let what ethical committees "might" believe deter you from using the best test targets and controls.

4. Make sure to get your scientific writing on point

You need to prepare your document after completing all the stages above and achieving fantastic results.

Writing well is all about telling a tale, therefore it has to make sense whether you're writing for a scientific audience or not.

Your book should contain an introduction, middle, and conclusion, as well as a "take home" message.

When reading your article, other scientists are interested in what you did, why you did it, what you found, and what, in your opinion, these findings mean.

Excellent scientific writing demands clarity, rationality, and conciseness.

Each paragraph should therefore be able to stand alone while also setting the stage for the paragraphs that come before and after it.

Use plain language and adhere to the conventions of excellent spelling, grammar, punctuation, and linguistic usage. Use straightforward language and adhere to proper grammar, spelling, punctuation, and linguistic conventions.

Any irrelevant knowledge, no matter how much you appreciate it, should be avoided.

Even though your research required years of toil and numerous tests, nobody else needs to be aware of them.

Include only research that is important to the article's core theme and the scientific issues it raises.

Most UGC Approved Journals have strict formatting guidelines that writers must follow.

To prevent spending time on corrections and prolonged correspondence with the journal's editorial staff, you must strictly adhere to these directions.

Making every effort to write a nearly excellent document the first time is crucial.

The structure of the Introduction, Methods, Findings, Discussion, Citations, References, Tables, and Figures is the most typical pattern for scientific articles.

What you should do before submitting your Manuscript?

Before submitting your manuscript, you must understand that you only have one opportunity to catch the attention of the editor; if it is marred by careless errors or omissions, your chance is lost. It is always very helpful to ask a non-specialist colleague to review your manuscript and comment on readability, typographical errors, grammar, etc. More importantly, the colleague will be able to offer constructive feedback on the logic of your manuscript and the meaning of the story. Particular attention should be given to the title of the manuscript, the abstract, and the cover letter to the editor, as explained in the following paragraphs.

5. Having a solid cover letter to back up your Manuscript

In the cover letter to the editor, your goal is to sell your article to the journal. You only have one chance and a few minutes, if not seconds, to get it right. Great care should be taken to grab the editor's attention and provide a reason to send your article for external peer review. You must avoid careless mistakes (which unfortunately happen frequently), such as addressing the letter to the wrong editor or even to the wrong journal.

Tips for Writing a Convincing Cover Letter

Name-call the editor-in-chief (EIC).

This suggests that you are familiar with the journal's editorial board and have taken the time to double-check. Avoid spelling the publisher's or the journal's name incorrectly.

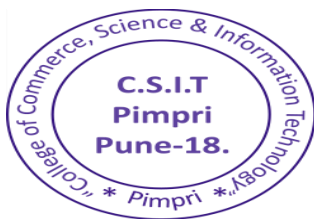

When authors submit their rejected manuscript to the following journal without making any changes, this occurs.

Make sure your cover letter isn't too short or long, and that it doesn't merely restate your abstract.

Emphasize your work's originality and why the journal's readers should care about it.

Explain how this work fits into the journal's mission and scope.

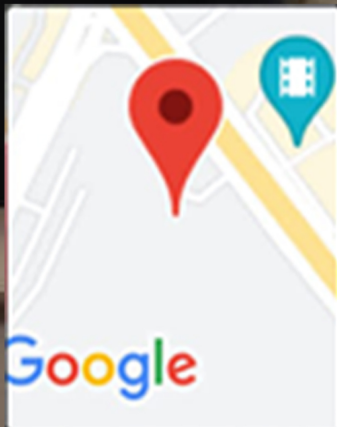

If your manuscript has been rejected by another publication, you might want to let the EIC know and send along any past critiques with your answer.
